During this time period, the Savoy ballroom was more than just a dance floor, and the Lindy Hop was more than just a dance. For many, this was a place and a dance of freedom. Throughout these years, the United States was recovering from WWI, endured the Great Depression, entered WWII, and suffered from deep social injustices between races. In the midst of these tragedies, the Savoy ballroom and the Lindy Hop became a place where people could set aside their differences and their worries and become masters of the dance floor. The constant and heavy rhythm of the swing music mixed with the improvisational liberty in the Lindy Hop allowed dancers to experience a sense of euphoric freedom and enjoyment during any given night.

The enthusiastic energy of the dance and the passionate sense of freedom are two of the primary qualities that have made the Lindy Hop timeless. It is for these reasons that the Lindy Hop has made a ferocious return within today’s society. In the early 90’s the dance was rediscovered and many of the original Savoy dancers were relocated and began to teach the world the beauty and grace of the Lindy Hop. Today, the Lindy Hop is danced across the world. It is almost guaranteed that one can travel to any major city in the world and find a Lindy Hop nightclub and dance through the night until the early hours of the morning.

The inspiration and beauty of this dance has been brought to Boulder, Colorado where professional instructors, Shana Worel and Stephen Newcomb, strive to maintain and teach the spirit of the dance. In addition to Lindy Hop, Boulder Swing Dance offers other American vernacular forms such as Balboa, Charleston, Shim Sham, and the Big Apple. With bi-weekly dances, and frequent classes, Boulder Swing Dance remains as a pinnacle of knowledge for American swing dances, and is a place where the Lindy Hop is preserved, studied, and developed.

Yesterday and Today

Once upon a time, there was a ballroom, and this ballroom set people free.

Specifically, this ballroom was located on Lenox Avenue in New York City between 140th and 141st. This was no ordinary ballroom, it was two stories high, and it consumed an entire New York block. Along with a massive dance floor, the top level contained two bandstands, and seven nights a week, two bands would battle to be the “Kings of Swing.” The judges of this contest would be the hundreds of dancers that flooded the floor night after night. Frequently, the ballroom would overflow with dancers and people filled the streets dancing to the jazz that was blasting through the walls. True to the words that were written on its marquis, this was “The Home of Happy Feet.” This was the Savoy ballroom.

During its lifetime from 1926-1958 the Savoy ballroom became an international sensation. Movie actors, politicians, and performers all flocked to the Savoy Ballroom to watch people dance the Lindy Hop. This energetic dance was born in Harlem and it was within this ballroom that the true hep cats developed their talent. The Lindy Hop became the first bonafide swing dance and is known as the godfather of all swing dances. Performance groups such as Whiteys Lindy Hoppers trained at the Savoy ballroom and later traveled the world sharing the profound rhythm of jazz and the swing culture to many nations.
